Los Angeles' TV and movie production spaces faced multiple shutdowns early in the pandemic, slowing production, while the demand for content has skyrocketed. Owners and managers are experiencing a pent-up demand for local studio spaces and have been operating at virtually 100% occupancy. Join this distinguished panel of real estate developers, occupiers, and architects to discuss how studio spaces survived and rebounded in the past 12 months and what this means for the future of the entertainment industry locally in Los Angeles.
